

A note that am back

I read an article in the South Africa's Sunday Times that there are people with PhD qualifications that cannot construct a sentence in English (despite having submitted their theses in English). English is my third language, I am still perfecting it. In the process of perfection, I post my ideas and writings in my blogs for all and sundry to read, analyse and critic. Sometimes the criticism is not so friendly or helpful, but I learnt to get up, wipe away the dust and continue. Continue in the believe that its not only success that makes or proves am getting better. But its both success and failure. The sooner I recover from the failure, pick up from my shuttled dreams and take up another risk, the better for my success.

If everyone had a blog

If everyone on earth has a blog, we would have at least 6 billion blogs. If half the people who have blogs commented on my blog, I would be having at least 35 million comments.

:)